HANDSHAKE, HARSH WORDS BY OIL OPPONENTS—Although Iran's fiery premier, Mohammed Mossadegh, slammed his open hand down on the council table at U.N. security council session at Plumb-Meadow, signifying his rejection of British oil proposals, he later calmed down to the extent of shaking hands with his chief adversary, Britain's Sir Chalmers Dobb (right). The 72-year-old premier said his government would not negotiate the oil dispute and urged the U.N. council to force out Britain's oil nationalization complaint.—Central Press Canada.

AERIAL TRAM BUILT AT FRONT LINE—This is Korea's longest elevated railway system and it was built in spite of heavy Communist sniping and mortar fire. A U.S. engineering division built it to carry supplies and men to the top of Hill 1073, which commanded a wide radius of ground held by Communists. Each load lifted by aerial tram took six minutes as compared to a four-hour back-breaking climb. At top ammunition is loaded on the tram for the guns on the crest of the hill. The warriors enjoying the ride, (above), are frequently the target of sniper fire, but they consider it safer than walking.—Central Press Canada Photos.

TIME OUT AFTER SUPERVISING EVACUATION—Resting comfortably in his Abadan home after supervising the evacuation of British personnel from Abadan railway in Hussein Mukhl, leader of the Persian Nationalist and driving force behind the plan to take over the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. Complying with the ultimatum of the Persian Nationalists, all British employees of the company were evacuated.

Equipment lies idle at the once-buzzing docks at Abadan, great oil port of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, now that the fleet of British oil technicians have returned to England.—Central Press Canada Photos.

THE SKYLINE OF DETROIT, Mich., forms a backdrop as Princess Elizabeth visited Government Dock during her stop at Windsor, Ont., with her 14-year-old son, Prince Arthur.

U.N. GUN BLASTS COMMUNIST HILL POSITIONS—As the autumn U.N. offensive gets under way, a 255-mm. gun opens up on Chinese Communist positions in western Korea. In this particular action 13,000 rounds of ammunition were used. The battle in Korea continues to see-saw as both sides step up their offensive.

DE GASPERI REPORTS ON MISSION TO OTTAWA—Italy's Prime Minister Alcide De Gasperi is shown as he addressed the chamber of deputies in Rome, reporting on his recent mission to Ottawa and his official visit to the U.S. De Gasperi in dark suit, is shown standing at the centre of the government bench.—Central Press Canada.

JET EXPERTS KEEP 'EM FLYING—The tail pipe of a U.S. air force F-86 Sabre jet becomes the ramp for this scene in which a maintenance crew member perches atop an engine as it is hoisted into position for installation at a Korean base. According to latest statistics, the jet fighters have accounted for 130 lost and damaged Russian MIG-16 during aerial combats.—Central Press Canada.

"TOP BRASS" CONFERENCE IN TOKYO—Supreme commander in the Far East, Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, (right), greets Gen. Omar Bradley and Charles Doherty, (left), state department expert on Russian affairs, upon their arrival in Tokyo for top level conference. Shortly after, this hour to Korea to tour the war front. Meanwhile the Red radio continues to broadcast predictions that U.N. forces are readying for another landing, or landing, in North Korea far above the present fighting lines.

MARBLE HILLS MAKE CONTENTED COWS—Farmer A. E. Wood of North Carolina, believes nothing is too good for his herd of 300 cattle—he even provides cowboys full of real marble for their every comfort. However, this isn't as expensive as it sounds, for by confining his farm to located near town which is the center of great marble-producing area, near the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. Appropriately enough, the town itself bears the name of "Marble".—Central Press Canada.

LATENT ATTIRE FOR THE FASHIONABLE BANDIT—Not a "man from Mars", but a criminal dressed to the hilt by a fantastically attired bandit who attempted to loot a San Gabriel, Calif., supermarket of $14,000. His armor proved to be more vulnerable than it appeared, for the gunman was shot to death by police as he fled the supermarket. After unmasking the dead man police identified him as Forrest Ray Chiles, 37, a former policeman in Glendora, Calif., who was fired in 1947 for "misconduct".—Central Press Canada.

COMMAND PERFORMANCE—Four-year-old Shenna Phillips knew a prize when she saw one—and acted accordingly. With the train carrying the young Prince Charles and his sister, Anne, stopped at Aberdeen while carrying the royal youngsters home to London from Balmoral, Shenna put on a stopping rope performance for Prince Charles, who watched delightedly from the train window.—Central Press Canada.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY— TOMORROW, KATE

Johnny, Her Boy . . . Why . . . Had She Doubled? By Constance Edgerton

KATE ENIGHT sat on the couch and looked at the clock. It was a night like this twenty-seven years ago, when she came here. She stood a moment at the door, and then she went to the chair to dream of her new work.

Twenty-seven years in one little hour, and tomorrow was a new day. Kate would wear a red dress, and she would have her hair done and her complexion. It would never do to let any body know she was such, for her name was Kate, and she was called "Young Teachers for young ladies."

She knew, from bits of talk, that Elmer Deaton was particularly anxious to get another teacher. She knew, from bits of talk, that Elmer Deaton, found him a salary in the home the night she came. He was a big, clear, when she was brought home on him his hair was combed and his little face was made.

He was nursing the girl his story. Five years old, an orphan. He had been around with the ranch, but came here, playing it was his duty.

Kate had taken the school "night nurse" because he had a house near the school. The doctor had thought of an adorable little boy to keep her company. They fell really to tears together. In time she taught the house and surrounding area.

Johnny taught the grades he was teaching in a boarding school in town for high school. Kate was not around home. In no time at all was she studying at university.

While he was a student there the Elmer Deaton came to her. He was not in on becoming a teacher. He was a school teacher. She and Johnny met.

He was here, married the week after he was graduated, and Elmer forgot about nursery school.

Elmer kept at Johnny, saying Kate was too far out of step to handle the school. He said that she should visit every family in the town of Kato, and when he found they didn't consider her the best teacher in the country, would he find a "Young Teacher" started out to canvas the district. He couldn't do it.

Elmer said, "You've taught him longer. He loved the school, the desk when he was carried his little when Kate wasn't looking, the flowers on the table, the long benches, maps, blackboard, and the other brick in the yard. He had fallen from that tree and broken an arm when he was nine."

Elmer had said, "Kate, you're not progressive."

Progressive? She had attended nursery school, kept up with young-ster, but she couldn't shed discipline.

But now she wanted the dropping of the second, she would apply for the school at Link Prairie, where her brother lived. Even though she said, "You've taught him longer. He loved the school, the desk when he was carried his little when Kate wasn't looking, the flowers on the table, the long benches, maps, blackboard, and the other brick in the yard. He had fallen from that tree and broken an arm when he was nine."

Families came from remote corners of the district. To me goodbye . . .
